Plagiarism in a digital age by Andrew Coven

Introduction

Plagiarism is often referred to as the practice of copying or borrowing someone else's original work or ideas. With the evolution of the World Wide Web this has become much more complex due to a wider range of source material being instantly available, differences in international copyright regulation and an understanding of different cultural practices when writing essays.

Types of Plagiarism

1. to steal and pass off (the ideas or words of another) as one's own
2. to use (another's production) without crediting the source
3. to commit literary theft
4. to present as new and original an idea or product derived from an existing source.

In other words, plagiarism is an act of fraud. It involves both stealing someone else's work and lying about it afterward.

Anyone who has written or graded a paper knows that plagiarism is not always a black and white issue. The boundary between plagiarism and research is often unclear. Learning to recognize the various forms of plagiarism, especially the more ambiguous ones, is an important step towards effective prevention. Many people think of plagiarism as copying another's work, or borrowing someone else's original ideas. But terms like "copying" and "borrowing" can disguise the seriousness of the offense.

If a writer wants to use visual information from a WWW site, many of the same rules apply. Copying visual information or graphics from a WWW site (or from a printed source) is very similar to quoting information, and the source of the visual information or graphic must be cited.

These rules also apply to other uses of textual or visual information from WWW sites; for example, if a student is constructing a web page as a class project, and copies graphics or visual information from other sites, she must also provide information about the source of this information.

Copying or inadequate reference to an original source can be unintentional. Or an international student may be unaware that the referencing practices at one university may be different to what they have been used to previously.

Students who want to make a point particularly clearly see paraphrasing the source as a strange thing to

Turnitin as Revision Assistant

- Your teacher may give you a similarity index requirement

For example:

“This essay may only have a 5% similarity index.”

OR

“Your research essay may have a similarity index of 20%.”

TITLE	SIMILARITY
Submission	0%
Submission	6%
Submission	43%
Submission	58%
Submission	80%

The color of the report icon indicates the similarity score of the paper, based on the amount of matching or similar text that was uncovered. The percentage range is 0% to 100% The possible similarity indices are:

- Blue: No matching text
- Green: One word to 24% matching text
- Yellow: 25-49% matching text
- Orange: 50-74% matching text
- Red: 75-100% matching text
